HANDLING TRUCK, Jest Some Suggestions For Picking and

Packing Tomatoes. Pens, beans, cucumbers and tomatoes will be coming along soon. How about packages in which to ship them? If you have not already done so, better by in a supply at once, suggests a writer in Farm Journal.

The packing sheds-are they in good shape? And the picking baskets and boxes for bandling encumbers, tomatoes and the like-are they ready for

Cultivate the tomatoes as long as you can get through without injury to vines. If the vines are staked and tied up, it will pay to keep the cultivator going until the season is well advanced, especially if the weather is dry. Regular shallow cultivation in dry weather will prolong the season, Increase the size and improve the quality of the fruit. At first tomatoes will need picking only every other day, but as the season advances it should be done every day. If they are to be shipped to a distant market, they should be picked as soon as the first tinge of red appears, but don't pick them too green. For shipping tomatoes there is no better package than the four basket crate. They should be packed so that the fruit in each case is uniform in size and color. The ideal thing is twelve tomatoes to the basket, six in each layer. They will bear considerable pressure if not overripe, and the basket should be full enough so that the covers will press firmly on the top layer. If picked at the right stage and properly packes tomatoes will carry all right a distance of 300 miles in a ventilated car. Beyond that distance they should go in a "freezer." Don't forget that It often requires more skill successfully to market a crop than it does to grow it. Are you prepared to market yours so that you will get the most out of it?

HAYRACK.

Low Down Wheels Enable One to Build a Higher Lond.

I prefer a hayrack not less than seven feet wide. Eight is better, as it prevents the hay from dropping off the sides, as it will occasionally when starting a load if the wind is blowing and there is but one on the wagon, says a writer in Rural New Yorker. If the rack does not have boards covering the whole rack, it will be best to put a small quantity of hay in the wagon be-One divorce case, Sadie C. Gilbert fore putting the first sling in place.

'the Harry R. Gilbert, both of Danville, was heard Saturday and a bill was granted on the ground of intolerable to lie straight. The slings should, for hay and grain, both be five feet wide severity. In the case of Sadie E. Burt hay and grain, both be five feet wide at least. Unless the ground is dry and hard a wagon with not less than three inch tires will be necessary. Using a Manure Hook. Many are the low down steel wheels which enable one to build a higher load and do the work easier. One or two men may work upon the wagon. However, it is not necessary to have hay forward, claiming it makes the work easier. The loader leaves the loaded than the sixteen foot rack, such as we use. The majority of those using the loader drive till nearly or quite a fourth of a load is in the wagon when the team is stopped and the hay is leveled. The number of stops will vary according to the size of the rack, the condition of the hay, height of wagon, strength and willingness of man on the load and upon the make of Tree Borers. In regard to the borers which attack the apple tree trunk and branches, Country Gentleman says that the most effective treatment of trees once infested and indeed the only effective treatment is to dig out the larvae by hand. These worms eat into the wood and under the bark of the trees and can be reached and killed if one takes the necessary labor. A man can cut out a majority of them by using a sharp knife. Although some damage will result to the tree by this sort of cutting, it will always be less than will result from the continued work of the insect. A strong pllable copper wire, however, is better than a knife in most cases, and if taken in combination with a sharp pocketknife makes the best of instruments for fighting the borer. This pliable copper wire can be thrust into holes made by the larvae and will kill a majority of them

Americans Greatest of Travelers. Americans are rightfully called the grentest travelers in the world. They all seem imbued with the spirit of Columbus, and when we think of that venturer across strange waters in search of he knew not what we can scarcely associate him with any other country as a native than ours. It is a noticeable fact that in every resort of prominence in England and on the continent there are to be seen among the tourists during the senson at least two Americans to every one represent-Macaroni is taken from a Greek dorl- ative of any other country, and in the African cities Americans are even more in predominance over travelers of other nationalities,-Leslie's Weekly,
